FULL-TIME PRE-DOCTORAL FELLOWSHIP POSITION AT HARVARD 2017-2018

Dr. Roland G. Fryer, Jr. of Harvard University is looking to hire several students to work in the Harvard EdLabs pre-doctoral fellows program. Dr. Fryer is looking for students to work with him for two years* after the students graduate from college in a variety of areas, including racial and income inequality and social injustice in the United States. Fellows will be responsible for organizing and analyzing data, developing presentations, drafting and editing research papers, and developing research proposals, as well as other tasks as necessary. In addition, EdLabs fellows typically attend classes and seminars at Harvard. The program thus serves as a good bridge between college and graduate school for students interested in economics and statistics. Applications are being accepted on a rolling basis.

Dr. Fryer is the Henry Lee Professor of Economics at Harvard University, Faculty Research Fellow at the NBER and recipient of the 2015 John Bates Clark Medal and the 2011 MacArthur Fellowship. Recent results from Dr. Fryer’s work have been published in the Quarterly Journal of Economics, American Economic Review, and have been the subject of articles in The New York Times and The Economist.

Applicants should send a detailed cover letter, current CV, complete transcript, and one academic reference to jobs@edlabs.harvard.edu.

*This position is a one-year appointment renewable for the second year based on funding and, as always, performance.
