Graduating Seniors:

The Center for the Economics of Human Development at the University of Chicago is recruiting for a Research Specialist.

In this role, the pre-doctoral researcher will conduct and support a variety of projects related to human capital, labor economics, and the economics of education.

Tasks will range across the research cycle and will include cleaning and analyzing large datasets, proposing grants for new projects, writing reports or papers, and presenting and disseminating research, enabling the researcher to gain experience in all aspects of the research process.

This full-time, benefits-eligible position reports to Professor James Heckman.

We, however, ask that applicants do not contact Professor Heckman directly regarding this position. Please review the full position description, contained in the link below.

Applications may be submitted directly through the link, and questions may be directed to jjh.coordinator@gmail.com

We welcome your application.
