The Cornell Undergraduate Economic Review, formerly The Visible Hand, is Cornell's premier undergraduate economics journal and is fully student run. We aim to cover a wide range of economic issues and keep the focus of each publication relevant to the contemporary issues in economics and economic research. We are distributed in print across the Cornell campus and are available online through the Cornell Economics Society website.

We have reached out to other peer universities, and we would like to invite students from Harvard University to submit papers as well. We accept past papers and original pieces, and we have no specific topic or length requirements. Any assistance in distributing this information to your economics students would be greatly appreciated.

Our submission deadline is Friday, March 9. Applicants should attach a Word document, indicate their major, graduation year, and college/university, and email it to cueconomicreview@gmail.com. If you would like more information, we would be glad to answer any questions.