The Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies offers funded summer internships for undergraduates at the research center of the Central Bank of Armenia (CBA), where they conduct the quantitative analysis and other research that shapes central bank policy. Each year, up to FOUR Harvard students are invited for 8-week research internships during June and July to carry out projects on topics developed in conjunction with CBA staff. The CBA is especially eager to attract advanced students with quantitative analysis skills who will be well-positioned to take full advantage of the opportunities they have to offer.

Here are some recent projects Harvard students have completed:

- “Capital Flows and Financial Vulnerabilities in Emerging Markets”
- “Commodity Price Pass-Through”
- “Remittances as a source of financing for entrepreneurship”
- “A learning-based model of Central Bank bailout decision-making”
- “CBA regional integration”

Housing, most meals, airport transfers, and other perks are provided by the CBA; the Davis Center provides a grant towards airfare and other costs not covered by the CBA. More information is found on the Davis Center website. Undergraduates apply through CARAT. The stated deadline is Wednesday, January 17, but late applications will be considered.

Contact Donna Griesenbeck, griesenb@fas.harvard.edu, with any questions.