Looking for Research Assistant in Washington, DC, for “Future of the Workforce” Initiative

Hello! I am looking for a Research Assistant at Brookings, in DC. The job could be a short term and/or longer term opportunity. Economics, quantitative, data visualization skills are a big plus, including an interest in labor economics or industrial policy. Most importantly, looking for someone with high standards of excellence, detail orientation, good writing skills and strong work ethic. The research assistant would support a project on the “Future of the Workforce” looking at US cities’ industrial growth, mapping occupational transitions and helping policy makers develop solutions to help people transition into high skill jobs. The role would include analysis, literature review, administrative support, etc. I am looking for someone on a temporary basis ASAP with the possibility of a longer term appointment. If interested, please email me at mescobari@brookings.edu. Thank you!
