

Jared Ellias, a professor at Harvard Law School, is looking to hire a paid Fall Semester research assistant through the Institute for Quantitative Social Science for empirical research on corporate bankruptcy and financial distress. To apply, please email Professor Ellias' assistant Alina Kilcoyne (kkilcoyne@law.harvard.edu) with a resume, transcript and a short cover email detailing your familiarity with natural language processing, statistical analysis and Python as well as how many hours you can commit to the project this Fall. Prior familiarity with financial data, corporate law or bankruptcy is not necessary. Programming experience is not necessary but is helpful and experience with very large datasets is also helpful.
